Airlines step up hiring as pilot shortage looms

Airlines have hired 2,426 new pilots so far this year, according to pilot advisory service FAPA.aero. A Boeing report issued this week predicts the industry will need to hire 2.1 million pilots, technicians and cabin crew through 2036, and experts predict that airlines could face a severe shortage of qualified personnel.

Shortage of construction workers predicted

A shortage of between 200,000 and 250,000 construction workers nationwide is possible, predicts Kim Waseca-Love, education and apprenticeship director for the Spokane Home Builders Association in Washington state. Organizations across the country are supporting apprenticeship programs to help fill the recruitment gap.
